

Employment Law Update: Taylor Walton LLP

Coronavirus

As you will be aware, the majority of the Government's Coronavirus restrictions ended on 19th July, including the requirement to "work from home if you can". As a result, many employers will be considering arrangements for returning to the workplace.

Whilst there may no longer be a legal requirement for measures such as home working, social distancing and mask wearing, employers are still obligated to ensure that employees have a safe place of work. To assist employers, the Government has issued updated guidance on ensuring that workplaces are operating in a way which reduces the transmission of Coronavirus as far as possible. Further details about the updated guidance and other employment related Coronavirus developments can be viewed in Taylor Walton LLP's update: Employment Law Update.

EU Nationals Right To Work

The Government has also issued updated guidance on conducting right to work checks for EU nationals following the expiry of the "grace period" on 30 June. Until 30 June, employers could continue to accept EU passports as evidence of an individual's right to work in the UK. This is no longer the case and it is important for all employers to familiarise themselves with the new requirements. Further information about the new requirements can also be found in our update.

If you have any queries relating to these matters or any other employment law queries, please do not hesitate to contact:

Alec Colson | Taylor Walton LLP

Partner | Head of Employment Department

T: 01582 390470

E: Alec.Colson@taylorwalton.co.uk